1. On 3 May 1966, the newly-elected presidium of DNA convened for the first time. From the East, Professor H. H. Franck was present. He had been vice-president during the previous term but does not belong to the new presidium. Speaking for East Germany, he explained that in East Germany standardization was being strictly planned and applied according to schedule and that it had a character other than that in the West. The new Office of Standardization, which is supposed to supervise the standard is proof that great importance is attached to standardization. Further East Germany hopes for close cooperation with the DNA, particularly since this is the only authorized four-zonal body and the only bond between East Germany and the Federal Republic on a technical level. Unfortunately recent cooperation has often been hindered because interzonal passes could not be issued to members in the East in time for meetings in the West. The Office of Standardization will seek to resolve this difficulty so that in the future meetings which take place in the West can also be visited by the members from East Germany. The ten new members of the presidium could not yet be named because the Office of Standardization is still being built up.
2. Professor Alfred Rachel, who was again elected president, thanked Professor Franck for his explanation with reference to the unaltered cooperation of East Germany in the DNA and requested Franck to use his influence to see to it that the new presidium members were named before 31 May. Professor Rachel added that he looked forward to continuing the practice of electing an East German representative to the office of vice-president. For this reason, the election of the vice-president could not take place until after the appointment of the East German members.
3. The Office of Standardization intended to publish the names of the ten new presidium members. As of 17 June, the DNA did not yet have this list in its hands.
4. When Germany was taken into the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) in 1962, the Deutscher Normenausschuss (DNA) undertook the responsibility for paying the yearly membership fee of 100,000. According to proportional population figures, the responsibility for 40,000 of this sum falls upon East Germany. At that time Professor Werner Lange of the State Planning Commission declared that East Germany was prepared to pay this fee. As of 19 June 1966, however, the payment for the year 1962 had
